

Fabulous Palace

The King of Pooka Pooka ruled his kingdom from his fabulous palace in the jungle, made out of grass and golden thatches. One day, sitting on his throne, he learned that a band of marauders was coming to the palace. He knew they would steal his throne, the symbol of his power. Thinking quickly, he instructed his servants to bring the throne upstairs and stow it in a secret closet. Soon the marauders arrived "Where's your throne?" they asked. The king looked surprised. "Throne? What throne?" But at that moment, the throne crashed through the ceiling and onto the king, killing him instantly. He should have listened to the ancient wisdom that "Those who live in grass houses shouldn't stow thrones."

