

Mule vs ICE

Every day, a mule would go into the field to work. On his back was always a stuffed clown doll, which he called Funny. The two were inseparable. One day an ICE agent came. He grabbed the mule and took him to an ICE detention facility. The clown doll fell off the back of the mule and was left in the field.

“What am I doing here!?!?” demanded the mule.

“You look strange. I think you’re an illegal immigrant,” responded the ICE agent.

“You idiot! I’m a mule!” said the mule.”

“I didn’t ask you whether you’re a mule,” said the ICE agent coldly.

The mule paused. Then he pleaded with the agent.

“I need to get back to work on the farm.”

“Not going to happen,” said the agent.

“Am I going to be deported?”

“Well, yes, but....” The agent looked worried, even a bit embarrassed. “...but there’s a problem with the paperwork. Something’s missing.”

“Look... I have to get back to the farm. I never go anywhere without my Funny!”

The agent’s eyes lit up. “That’s the problem!” He ran out of the detention center, drove to the farm, found the doll in the field, and brought it back to the mule. Then he shoved them both on an airplane that immediately took off for Guatemala.... illustrating that a mule and his Funny are soon ported.
