

Seeing Double

Bob Dylan was at home, tending to his 1-year old kid and trying to work on a new song. But he was stopped by a strange malady. As he sang, he heard an echo of his voice. He reached for his harmonica, but now there were two of them. The words in his mind were doubled. He was terrified by all of this, and looking down at his kid (now both of them), he saw that she was sitting there looking at him with the same terrified expression he must have. He had to say something to explain to her what was going on. "It ain't no use to sit and wonder why, babe... I don't think right, it's all twice."

