HIP HIP, OY VEY

Do you believe in miracles? I do. Sorry, but it relates to more medical stuff. I'll be sounding like a real Sun Cityite but I must share the news with you.

Two months ago, I experienced a mild heart attack and had to be hospitalized for three days. Many medications polluted my pure body and unfortunately, must continue to do so. Whether it was the bombardment of toxic stuff, my altered mental tape of discouragement, and the sudden change in my active, busy schedule, plus lovely things to look forward to...my body rebelled by causing constant pain in my right leg.

This discomfort accelerated so quickly, I requested a walker and cane from the Sunshine committee. When I asked for a checkup with my general practitioner, the walk to his office with the walker almost resulted in tripping, as the walker did not like the divisions in the concrete. The hip x-ray, showed advanced arthritis in the hip and my doctor recommended nine, not two, Ibuprofen per day.

When even nine pills didn't do the trick, I made an appointment with an orthopedic medic. He showed me an enlarged version of my x-ray and said that I could try several things, but surgery was imminent. He then prescribed a stronger pain reliever, two a day, twelve hours apart.

The herculean drug was fairly effective, but I often couldn't wait for the twelve hours to pass. My youngest daughter, Joline, was very concerned when I told her that I most likely would undergo a hip replacement right after our family reunion in late June. She immediately did a thorough research on the internet and consulted with the manager of a local health food store. He gave her a product he had just received, and said it could very well help me. It consisted of every omega nutrient I had ever heard of plus a few other healthy goodies. Joline immediately shipped it to me and I swallowed two gel caps in the morning and two at night. Luckily, I'm known as "Deep Throat" because those babies are the size of my pinky.

On the third day, the pain was noticeably diminished. By the fifth day, I got by with one pain pill. The next day, nada! My lovely walker, that I bought at Costco for $100 (cobalt blue) is gathering dust. I'm walking with a spring in my step again, and it's such a relief not to hurt anymore. At the end of a lively day, I feel a slight tiredness in my leg, but I have a solution for that too.

In my quest for hip-relief, I had gone to a local chiropractor. His eight minute, $38 fee treatment didn't help a bit, but I'm glad I went. In the waiting room, there was a massage chair that treated me to a full kneading and manipulation, including my legs. When the chiropractor called me in, I said, "I don't need you anymore." and proceeded to exclaim how wonderful the chair was.

"Oh, I can get it for you at a good price." he promised as he quoted the amount. After the disappointing treatment, I looked up that very chair in the internet (I took careful notes.), found it for $500 less and ordered it from out of state, no sales tax, and free shipping. It didn't matter that it would take two to three weeks for delivery.

That was about a month ago, and I thought that lovely chair would not be used for a few months because of the impending operation. BUT...today, it's a different story! I have decided not to plan on any knife carving on my pure body, unless I absolutely need it.
AND, the chair arrived yesterday. The delivery men would only put it in the house, but the rest was up to me. We used to play "house" in boxes of that size. I tackled part of it yesterday, with my own knife. Today, I slowly got that 150 pound tension-reliever out of the box, assembled it, plugged it in and gave myself a needed treatment.

I call that a double miracle. You believe now, don't you?
