

Kid Tested, Ferret Approved

Harvey finds a seriously injured ferret in his backyard. He knows that it's generally best to let Nature take care of its own, but he can't bear to let the animal die, as surely seems his fate. He brings the ferret into his kitchen and tends to his wounds as best he can. The next morning, Harvey finds his guest visibly improved and clearly in need of something to eat. He knows nothing of how to feed a ferret and so decides to leave the choice to his guest. He puts the animal on his kitchen table, along with a bowl and open boxes of Corn Flakes, Lucky Charms, Cheerios, and Kix. "Here you are!"

says Harvey. "Eat whatever you wish." He wonders which he will choose, and at first, the ferret seems somewhat disoriented. Finally, he sniffs at the boxes and chooses one of them. Ordinarily, a ferret would have no problem getting into a box, but his injury is still affecting his coordination, and the box tips over. Nonetheless, Harvey has learned his guest's choice. The ferret is spilling, but the wish is flake.

