

Wait, There's More!

A beggar sat on a busy street in Mumbai. As a man in a business suit approached, the beggar held his hand out "Sahab! A few rupees and you will be rewarded in your next life!" The man stopped and frowned but reached into his pocket. "And my wife and child," the beggar continued. "We haven't had a meal in two days. Please give me money for food!" The man paused and looked at the beggar. "And my aging mother is losing her sight. I need to find money to pay for an operation!" At this, the man scowled and hurried off. On the other side of the street was another beggar.

A well-dressed man ignored him as he passed by, but the beggar called out to him. "Sahab! I am very weak. Perhaps you don't need a few rupees as much as I do." The man stopped and frowned. The beggar waited, and the man finally came up with a coin, which he handed to the beggar. The beggar was satisfied and turned his attention down the street. He knew enough not to put all his begs in one asking.
